FLTEACH: The Foreign Language Teaching Forum (www.cortland.edu/flteach/)

My colleague, Dr. Robert Ponterio, and I are co-founders and co-moderators of FLTEACH, an electronic discussion group that began as a professional service project in February of 1994. FLTEACH is an academic discussion list allowing foreign language (FL) teachers in elementary and secondary schools and colleges across New York State, the country, and the world to use electronic mail to discuss problems, ask questions, and share information related to the profession. All of the subscribers receive a copy of each message posted to the list. The topic of this list is FL teaching methods including high school / college articulation, training of student teachers, student placement, the needs of new teachers, FL curriculum, and the NYS syllabus. This project was begun as the result of articulation meetings among teachers arranged through NYSAFLT (New York State Association of Foreign Language Teachers) showing the need of a forum for discussion of issues of concern to us at all levels. The moderators intend that this list also be used to foster a community in which colleagues can share ideas, outlines, handouts and other teaching materials, syllabi, and bibliographies. The function of this list is closely tied to the mission of SUNY Cortland in its support of the teaching profession. Though the initial focus was on FL teaching in New York State schools, discussion and discussants are not limited geographically. In fact most list subscribers live in other states and countries and their professional interest and expertise make FLTEACH a more valuable resource for all (<http://www.cortland.edu/flteach/flteach-anc.html>).

The FLTEACH discussion list went online on Feb. 1, 1994 and subscribership has steadily increased since then. As of 2 January 2011 more than 5,280 foreign language professionals including teachers at the elementary school, middle school, and high school levels, college and university professors, undergraduate and graduate students in teacher training programs, military and other governmental agencies, administrators, and publishers were subscribed to the list mostly from the US, Canada, and Australia but also from over 75 other countries. This figure does not include those monitoring the list via RSS feeds or merely accessing the discussion via the archives on a regular basis. Growth is also illustrated by the fact that the average number of messages per day is now approximately 50-60. List management and ancillary maintenance require an extensive time commitment on the part of the co-moderators: an average of 2-3 hours daily throughout the calendar year.

The extensive work involved in maintaining FLTEACH is ly appreciated in professional circles. The immediate past president of ican Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages (ACTFL) made the following statement in letter of grant support in the fall of 2005:

Equitable participation is a feature of FLTEACH that is rare in other settings. Professional conferences bring concerned participants together, but the resources required to attend such meetings are often beyond the capabilities of many stakeholders in the foreign language education community. FLTEACH provides an opportunity for participants to interact with each other from their homes, schools, or offices. Beginning teachers in their first methodology course can ask questions of the most highly regarded experts in the field. Student teachers and first-year teachers can ask for advice from teachers with many years of teaching experience in multiple teaching environments. The range of “grass roots” and widely recognized participation is unique. In addition, participation ranges from presentation of fully documented research and curriculum plans to daily teaching ideas and requests for information or sources of materials. While there are other listserv lists in our field and other web sites available, none is as frequently visited and as highly regarded as FLTEACH (A. L. Heining-Boynton, 2005).

In addition, FLTEACH has been cited as the “FL teacher’s flagship for information and discussion on methods as well as for access to specific teaching materials and other resources” (Finnemann, 1996; p. 6). Indeed, FLTEACH is cited as a resource of “valuable professional support” (Shrum & Glisan, 2005, pp. 6-7) in several leading FL methodology and language textbooks (Shrum & Glisan, 2010).

The WWW homepage of FLTEACH currently serves as a global resource of links to target language sites, authentic materials, and archives germane to FL curricula. The FLTEACH site, including its ancillaries, regularly receives well over 100,000 hits per month, a considerable portion of the entire SUNY Cortland server. The FLTEACH project has definitely put SUNY Cortland at the forefront of FL teacher education and has garnered much respect for the institution as host of this important professional resource.
