Hi Lin Lin! How are you doing? Hope your semester is getting off to a good start! I am back home on Long Island and in a fifth grade classroom. My first couple of days were so overwhelming but I am getting into a routine and starting to feel more comfortable. I am almost done teaching my first social studies unit on European Explorations. I really dislike the text they use since it is very one sided like you said most are. I have been making a point to have the students think of multiple perspective in any way that I can even though it is difficult when the text is written from an English perspective. I talked a lot about Thanksgiving when mentioning the Pilgrims and if that is really considered to be the "first Thanksgiving." When I was teaching about the Jamestown colony, I gave the students an assignment to write a diary entry from the perspective of either a Native American or an English settler. Because of your class I can see how children can get the wrong impression about history. It is so important to show students that there are many sides to a story. So I wanted to thank you for all you have taught me. The textbooks we had and your lessons have been very beneficial. My next unit will be on the American Revolution and this unit I will type up to be submitted to Taskstream so it has to be really great. I was wondering if there was any way for me to get back onto the elearning from your class to see some of the lessons you had posted? Or if you could give me any hands on activities. I remember the "tug of war" game which I thought was great but only wrote a brief description. Do you think you could email it to me or explain again? Also if you think there is another way I can use that idea without the rope since my students might not be responsible for that activity. I am going to use the book My Brother Sam is Dead for the class to read as well. If you have any other ideas that would be of great help. Thank you again for everything. You really have been one of the best professors I have had at Cortland! Hope to hear from you soon!

Hi, Brittany.

ELearning's grade book has many problems this year. I spent the whole day yesterday and the tech specialists can't explain why I saw a different grade as you see it. I'll change the grade for you, but it will take a while since I have to go through the proper channel to have the grade adjusted for you.

Apologies for the glitch. Have a good break.

Lin lin,

I just saw my grade was posted and I would just like to know why I ended up with an A- Based on my grades I thought I would have gotten much higher and even on elearning it says I have an A. If you could just get back to me that would be greatly appreciated! Thank you.
